Activity of the Day

Writing a story is a little bit like building a house. You start by building at the bottom with the beginning, you work your way up to the middle and you finish with the roof at the end.

Below, on the left, there are three sentences from a story about a boy named Jimmy. On the right, there is a house labelled with those three different parts of a story: the beginning, the middle and the end. Figure out where each sentence belongs in a story and draw a line from the sentence to the part of the house (and the story) where it belongs.

Jimmy is rescued by NASA astronauts.

Jimmy builds a rocket ship that takes him to Mars.

Jimmy gets trapped in an abandoned Martian colony.

If you have extra time after the program, pick one of the sentences from the story about Jimmy and draw it.
